Dear Editor,

We'd appreciate if you can get the word out about our not-for-profit which helps makes our roads safer by providing training for automotive technicians. Our dedicated volunteers work tirelessly and without compensation to help provide this service to technicians. The following is a press release about our organization which needs consumer awareness, because people need to know where they should feel safe getting their cars fixed—from professionals they can trust who invest their time and money staying up to date with automotive technology:

Technicians, not coffee, keep America running! If you have ever been stranded on the side of the road, you know the importance of a good automotive technician. Remember, a vehicle is a lot like a 3,000 pound bullet—its proper mechanical operation at all times is absolutely necessary to keep you safe. Therefore, having the technician who works on your car educated concerning the changing technology in the field is vital.

But how are you going to be sure that your technician is continually up-to-date? The problem is not that professional auto technicians do not have a strong desire to learn about today's automobiles. The real problem is that technicians generally do not have much access to affordable real-world training.

However, there is a notable exception to this! Technicians Service Training (TST), a group of dedicated automotive technicians and instructors committed to the mission of continuing the education of all automotive technicians, affordably offers real-world training that helps save you gas, money, and maybe even your life! TST is a 501(c) (3) educational not-for-profit charitable organization that provides such training through its chapters in Auburn, Massachusetts; Southbury, Connecticut; Totowa, New Jersey; Mahopac, New York; and nationally via events and online seminars. This organization accomplishes its mission by bringing the nation's best automotive instructors and specialized experts to each chapter to inform and update technicians on all aspects of today's modern vehicles.

Because such training is otherwise cost prohibitive, often the technician that works on your car is unaware that the information he needs to stay up to date and just tries the best he can. So, if you are a driver concerned about your vehicle's fuel efficiency and safety, and want to have the peace of mind knowing your vehicle was fixed right the first time, inquire where you get your vehicle serviced whether the technicians there take part in the Massachusetts, Connecticut, New Jersey or New York TST chapters; or attend TST's national events and online training. Better yet, pass the good word to your technician that there is cutting-edge training in his field that is affordable, which can save both of you time and money.

TST can be reached on the internet at TSTseminars.org or by phone at 845 628-6928.
